May I cite this work? – Yes, if …

... the right to citation can be applied
- Is there a purpose of citation? Is there a connection between the citation and your own work?
  - Did you explain the connection between both works?
    - Is the length of the citations appropriate? Did you cite only as much as necessary?
      - Did you mark and reference the citation clearly?

... the work is in the public domain
- Is it a work that doesn’t meet the threshold of originality?
  - Has the copyright protection already expired?
    - Is the work marked as in the public domain?

... you have a permission from the copyright holder
- Is a corresponding license granted?
  - Do you have permission from the copyright holder?
    - oder

Cite this work and give proper reference!
What if ...

...the source hasn't been published?

... the citation is an image you want to change?

... you want to merge information from different sources into a table or figure?

Then you obtain permission from the copyright holder to cite the work.

Then you get permission to modify the work. Alternatively, create your own image and name the source on which your image is based.

Then you create a new table or image and indicate which information comes from which source.

Further information can be found in the TUM citation guide at: www.ub.tum.de/en/citation-guide

This work was published under CC BY-SA 4.0 license.