In this paper we present a first case study which follows the SysLab method through the analysis phase of the software-engineering process. We specify the account management system of a bank using different description techniques defined by the SysLab method. This example illustrates a possible development process and allows an evaluation of the current status of the SysLab project.

Stichworte:
Analysis; Design; Method; Description Techniques; Business Process; Documentation; Distribution